A huge part of the City of Enterprise's history involves a bug called the boll weevil. Long ago, boll weevils invaded the city's cotton crops causing the area's economy to be at stake. The city decided to plant peanuts instead, and at one point in time Coffee County produced and harvested more peanuts than any other county in the nation. Since then the City of Enterprise has a profound appreciation of the boll weevil bug and the lessons it taught.

Boll Weevils are once again invading Enterprise -- however, this time, they won't be destroying crops or ruining the local economy.

As a collaborative community art project in Enterprise, Weevil statues of reinforced fiberglass are decorated in various ways, selected by the statues' sponsors, and placed at various outdoor locations around the city. Both visitors and locals are invited to stop and admire the colorful Boll Weevils and take photos any time they happen upon them.
